

As seen in

July 2, 2008

Firm's baseball clinic a hit

Cohen & Perfetto LLP, a Manhattan-based boutique real estate law firm, sponsored a baseball clinic at the Richmond County Bank Ball Park, home of the Staten Island Yankees.

Louis A. Perfetto, managing partner of the firm who at 18 was a prospect for the Los Angeles Dodgers and Kansas City Royals, along with two former New York Yankees, Mickey Rivers and Roy White, worked with the young kindergartners and first graders, all members of the Manhasset Baseball League, a non-profit organization in Long Island. Two former Staten Island Yankees, Jason Faigin and Steve Langan, and several coaches and players from the College of Staten Island baseball team also helped with the instruction.

The little leaguers were invited by Cohen & Perfetto to participate in the special baseball clinic where they and their coaches learned the finer points of throwing, catching, hitting, and base running on the field where Robinson Cano, Melky Cabrera and Chien-Ming Wang used to play baseball.

After the clinic, the more than 350 attendees rubbed elbows with the baseball greats and got autographed photos during a picnic dinner.

Perfetto turned down offers from the Royals and Dodgers to go to law school. Today he has two children in the Manhasset Baseball League where he is a coach and the commissioner of the First Grade Boys Division.

“It is an amazing thing for me to be able to give back to my community and pass on my passion for baseball to a younger generation,” said Perfetto. “I know that this is something they will remember for the rest of their lives.”

Louis Perfetto (far left) and Marshall Cohen (far right) pose with former Yankees Roy White and Mickey Rivers at the Cohen & Perfetto sponsored baseball clinic at the Richmond County Bank Ball Park, home of the Staten Island Yankees.